

Phoebe Hollyer
Rite 13 passage

When I first read this passage the phrase that popped out at me the most was love your neighbor as yourself. It reminded me of sitting in kindergarten talking about the “golden rule”. Treat other people how you want to be treated, and that love can’t hurt anyone is just what this passage is saying. There are many wars in the world and people die every day because of them. If we all treated each other how we want to be treated, there would be a lot less fighting in the world.

Every year at school there are always new kids who don’t know anybody and sit by themselves at lunch. On the first day of school 2 years ago, I saw three girls at lunch by themselves and I decided to go over and say hi to them because one was in my math class. I started talking to them and now we are all really good friends. I’ve never had to move to a new school with all new kids but I can imagine it would be really hard. I know that if I had to move to a new school I would really appreciate it if someone came up and said hi to me.

So, next time you’re walking out of the Wawa hold the door for the next person, if your friend is sick give them a call or send them a get well card, or recycle your plastic bottle instead of throwing it out. It's the little things that make a difference in our world.